Sgt. Brearly, thank you for your response. You wrote: "The Long Beach Police Department does not have written policies specific to the retrieval or analysis of digital video evidence and CCTV."

To be clear, are you saying that, with regard to the retrieval and analysis of CCTV recordings made by private systems (such as convenience store security cameras) the Long Beach Police Department has NO policies or procedures that govern the training and qualifications of police personnel who handle digital media evidence?

Are you saying that the LBPD has NO written standards of practice regarding the methods, procedures, facilities, or equipment used in the retrieval, analysis, retention, and release of digital media evidence?

Is this correct? LBPD personnel are just winging it with regard to CCTV evidence?

Why does Chief Luna think this is OK?

Hello,

I have received your request for "written policies and procedures regarding the retrieval, analysis, retention, and public release of digital video evidence and CCTV records."

The Long Beach Police Department does not have written policies specific to the retrieval or analysis of digital video evidence and CCTV.

I have attached the Long Beach Police Department policy in regards to the retention of digital evidence. This policy is specific to digital evidence acquired through the deployment of body worn cameras.

Regarding the public release of digital video, records maintained by the Long Beach Police Department are subject to release in compliance with the California Public Records Act.

Please let me know if you have any questions or if I can provide additional information that will be helpful to you.

Thank you,

Sergeant Joshua Brearley
Long Beach Police Department
Office of the Chief of Police
